

Cable companies should not be able to keep raising the prices for their 100 some channels when fewer people want to watch that much television. Technology is available to allow subscribers to pick their channels and only be charged for the number of channels selected.